First PropTech Competition

Date: June 12th, 2023
Location: Brooklyn Law School

Event Description: A competition between six pre-Seed and seed startups in the real estate tech sector. It was an opportunity for members and nonmembers to witness visionary industry leaders navigating the transformative period of real estate technology. They discovered tangible solutions that are propelling the real estate industry forward. The event provided an excellent platform for networking and connecting with owners, operators, developers, investors, and other influential professionals.

Through a meticulous board nominations process, we carefully selected pre-seed and seed companies to participate in the competition, which included Dottid, Openigloo, HILO, Jet.Build, GoPowerEV, and Matrix Rental Solutions. Leveraging the influential connections of our chapter's board within the real estate industry, we assembled a panel of accomplished judges. This esteemed panel consisted of renowned individuals such as Michael Rudin, David Reiss, Patrick Tully, Doris Pitilon, and James Barrett. We were also lucky to have Eric Brody as our emcee who has a venture fund that invests in real estate technology.

The showcased PropTech companies have effectively addressed various challenges within the real estate industry. They tackled issues related to construction, asset management for both industrial and office spaces, real estate brokerage, affordable housing, EV charging infrastructure in multifamily properties, and the overall tenant experience enhancement for office and multifamily renters.

Following the presentations, the networking segment of the program proved highly successful, with numerous meetings arranged between attendees, including both members and non-members of the NAIOP NYC Chapter, and the presenting companies. This clear demonstration of interest and engagement underscores the remarkable impact of the event on the real estate community.
